In the small town of Smethport, Pennsylvania, a family's dream home turned into a nightmare. What started as strange noises and cold spots quickly escalated into full-blown poltergeist activity. Doors would open and close on their own, objects would fly across the room, and disembodied voices would whisper threatening messages.

The family, terrified and desperate, called in a team of paranormal investigators. The investigators quickly determined that the house was haunted by a malevolent entity. The entity was angry and wanted the family out of the house.

The family tried to ignore the entity, but it only became more aggressive. The investigators warned the family that they needed to leave the house immediately, but the family was reluctant to give up their home.

Finally, after one particularly terrifying night, the family decided to leave the house. They packed up their belongings and fled into the night. They never returned to the house again.

The story of That Thing Did is a chilling reminder that not all houses are as they seem. Sometimes, the things that go bump in the night are more than just our imagination.
