The trial was highly publicized and ended in a hung jury. Snuka died in 2017 without ever being convicted of Argentino's murder.

The Events Leading Up To Argentino's Death

Argentino and Snuka met in 1982 while they were both working for the World Wrestling Federation (WWF). Argentino was a ringside photographer and Snuka was a wrestler. The two began dating shortly after they met.

On May 8, 1983, Argentino and Snuka checked into the Days Inn motel in Allentown, Pennsylvania. The two had been arguing for several days and Argentino was reportedly upset that Snuka was not spending enough time with her.

On May 10, 1983, Argentino was found dead in the motel room. Snuka claimed that he had left the room to go to the lobby and when he returned, he found Argentino dead. He said that she had committed suicide by hanging herself.

The Investigation

The police initially ruled Argentino's death a suicide, but they later reopened the case after Snuka's ex-wife, Carole, told them that she believed that Snuka had killed Argentino.

The police investigation revealed that Argentino had been beaten and strangled before she was hung. There was also evidence that Snuka had been drinking heavily on the night of Argentino's death.

The Trial

Snuka was arrested and charged with murder in 1985. The trial began in 1987 and lasted for several months. The prosecution presented evidence that Snuka had beaten and strangled Argentino before he hung her.

The defense argued that Argentino had committed suicide and that Snuka was not responsible for her death. The jury was unable to reach a verdict and the trial ended in a hung jury.

The Aftermath

Snuka was never convicted of Argentino's murder. He continued to wrestle for several years after the trial, but his career was never the same. He retired from wrestling in 1993 and died in 2017.

Argentino's death remains a mystery. There is no doubt that she was murdered, but it is unclear who killed her. Snuka was the only person who was ever charged with her murder, but he was never convicted.
